rooms on display here feature custom furniture, hand-painted walls, vintage pieces and unique accents. They're each representative of Bishop's favorite type of client, one who fully entrusts her with their space and is willing to take risks.

BRIANNE BISHOP DESIGN

Brianne Bishop brings a well-rounded perspective to high-end residential and commercial interior design. She founded her eponymous firm in 2010. "Being architecturally trained, we love to honor the history of a building," she says, "and my construction background allows us to also project manage."

Brianne Bishop is proof that true success is a melding of your experiences, passions and areas of expertise—and for her, it goes as far back as grade school. "I have been working toward becoming an interior designer since second grade," she says. "I knew this is what I was meant to do. Earning my fine arts degree for the design education; a business management degree to run my own firm; and traveling all over Europe, including studying in London, to see architecture and design history firsthand is what molded me to where I am today."

Now she's a dozen years into running her own eponymous design studio, which does everything from gut remodels to interior furnishings. "We love designing livable spaces that can hold up to an active family lifestyle—though not necessarily appear that way," Bishop says of her team. "Our designs are edgy and bespoke; we focus on texture and scale to bring interest to a space." Currently, she's loving the postmodern revival. "We incorporate this trend in art and accessories, and an accent chair here and there," she says. "We are also welcoming brown and warm tones back with open arms, and texture is having a moment."

Bishop leaves her ego at the door when starting a new project; she's there to serve her clients, many of whom are return customers. Her best advice? "Take your time with design," she says. "Live in a home before making major decisions; wait for what is right."
