Interior designer Brianne Bishop went to a dark place when she was tasked with making over a cavernous master bedroom in Deerfield. "I take sleep very seriously, and a dark room is one of the best ways to promote a good rest," explains Bishop. To wit, she replaced the neutral wall-to-wall carpeting with ebony-stained hardwood flooring, introduced a textural handpainted wallcovering and painted the lofted ceiling in a matching graphite hue. A large-scale chandelier made of leather strips takes advantage of the high ceilings, and at night, it creates a sexy glow that is reflected by the large brass mirror propped against the wall next to the silk mohair-covered headboard. "This is one of my favorite projects," Bishop says. "I love the drama."
